SERIES

Gender and Crime in a Globalised World

Series Editors: Marian Duggan, University of Kent, UK, Leah Cleghorn, Nottingham Trent University, UK, Sarah Agnela, Somaliland Energy Commission, Somaliland and Silvana Tapia Tapia, University of Birmingham, UK and University of Azuay, Ecuador

"This new book series, curated by an experienced and diverse team of editors, will fill a remarkable gap in the literature on gender and crime. The series, in embracing the complexities of gender, places those complexities in a contemporary glocal world: a world in which space is neither virtual nor real but both simultaneously. I look forward with anticipation to the first book in this series and all those which will follow."

Sandra Walklate, University of Liverpool

"This book series will contribute to our knowledge about gender and crime across the globe. It is a welcome development in an increasingly polarised world and I expect diverse voices to come to the forefront in examining issues central to international feminist criminology."

Rosemary Barberet, John Jay College of Criminal Justice

This series showcases innovative research and debates centred around the increasingly globalised intersections of gender and crime. The topical contributions focus on a range of issues affecting victims, offenders, and practitioners including crime, criminalisation, victimisation, access to justice, and statutory sector experiences. Intersections of identity are also reflected through the employment of feminist, queer, postcolonial, and masculinities theorising.

Call for proposals

We are interested in publishing innovative work from both established and early career researchers.

We welcome proposals that offer critical insights into the nature, status and future of gendered crime, harm, incarceration, culture, and victimisation.

We are particularly keen to promote global scholarship, views, and debates on these themes.
